

Amy George

I've been a Special Education Legal Rights Advocate at Disability Law Center since 2015. I assist parents with advocating for their children's special education services through their IEP Teams as well as through dispute resolution options that are available to them under the IDEA. I represent students through their parents at IEP Team meetings, mediations and facilitated IEP Team meetings, and use the State Complaint process to address IDEA violations to resolve disputes between parents and school districts. I deliver parent trainings and outreach to teach parents about their rights under the IDEA and provide them with strategies to become successful self-advocates. I spend a lot of my time talking to parents and reviewing their individual cases to give them the tools they need to resolve their issues with their school district to meet their children's educational needs.
