

OUR STORY

People often ask how Stone Soup Group got its name. Have you read or heard the Stone Soup fable? A hungry stranger arrives in a village that has fallen on hard times and no one is willing share their food. Since everyone claimed to have nothing to eat, she tells them she can make stone soup and places a stone in some water to boil. Eventually, the curious townspeople gather and she tells them the soup is done, but it would taste better with a carrot or an onion. One by one, the villagers add a vegetable or meat until there is enough nourishing, tasty soup to feed everyone in the village.

Like the villagers in the fable, families and providers of children with special needs gathered in 1992 to share ideas and resources forming Stone Soup Group. Today we continue to work to sustain the health and well-being of Alaskan children with special needs and their families. Through listening to the stories of families, we identify areas of need and work with communities to find solutions.
